This is The Wizard of Oz as you've never seen it before - through the eyes of a little girl who is blind.

If you watched the Oscars this year, than you probably saw Emily's Oz, a short featurette promoting Xfinity's new talking guide for people with visual disabilities. The featurette introduces us to Emily Groves, a precocious 7-year-old and avid fan of The Wizard of Oz. Born with glaucoma and Sei-toptic dysplasia, Emily has never "seen" the film the way people without visual disabilities do - she has a vision of Oz that is completely her own. Xfinity's spot brings us into that world, building the Scarecrow, Tin Man, Cowardly Lion, and Oz itself from the ground up, all according to Emily. This month we bring you the five-minute making-of of Emily's Oz, and encourage you to check out the rest of Xfinity's Emily's Oz site for photos and videos of this wonderful interpretation of Oz and its inhabitants.

Three Reasons Why This is Worth Watching

1. "People are shocked when they find out that Emily, or anyone that's blind, watches a movie..." says Emily's father. And it's true - we don't often consider how people with visual disabilities can also enjoy movies and television. This piece debunks the idea that people with low vision can't fully appreciate visual media.
2. You never hear the words "right" and "wrong". The entire crew is totally supportive of Emily's interpretation of this beloved classic - "I'm working with the director, Emily, to make her vision come alive," says director Andreas Nilsson. You see the whole team working one on one with Emily to ensure that what's on screen is true to what she's imagined.

3. "I'm just going to tell you about Dorothy. To me, she wears ruby slippers, and they'd be like stone, they'd be really, really pretty." Emily's vision encourages us all to re-evaluate what words like "pretty" - words we typically think of applying to the visual world only - really mean.
