"Elephant Talk"

Episode 5: Turning On The Volume

"You probably didn't realize how big an issue this was going to be going in, you thought you did and you had the best intentions. And I've got to hand it to you, you said, "I'm doing this." But you didn't realize all the implications and ramifications." - Pam

"We hope the podcast is helpful to other couples who are grappling with these issues" - Jon

This month, Trusted Source spotlights an episode of the podcast "Elephant Talk." The podcast explores the intimate and universal varieties of love and relationships. In this particular episode, host Andy Horning sits down with Jon and Pam. Pam experienced hearing loss as a child, and at fifty, she received a cochlear implant. This episode delves into how the couple communicates now, the different ways their patience is tested, and how, after 25 years of marriage, their life together is still full of surprises.

THREE REASONS TO WATCH

PRODUCTION VALUE

The show is a pleasure to listen to from a technical standpoint. The audio is clear and well-mixed, with the dialogue and music blending beautifully. It is used effectively to help to tell Jon and Pam's story.

OUTLOOK

The podcast generates empathy by allowing us to learn about a relationship whose challenges may be different than ours, but also helps us to understand that communication in marriage is universal.

CONVERSATION

Pam and Jon speak humorously and lovingly about their marriage while never shying away from being honest about what frustrates them most. Nobody said marriage was easy.

There is so much exciting and well-made media about disability. The challenge is knowing where to find it, and how to use it.

Trusted Source is a monthly media recommendation that you can use in your trainings and classrooms, and that you can share with your networks. We hope you find these pieces as insightful and inspiring as we do.
